was both inalienable and impartible. But when partition did actually take place, it was done with the consent of all the members.

Nowadays, occasionally, a Coorg widow who is marrying her dead husband's younger brother is given rights anew in the okka of her new husband. This novel custom proceeds from the idea referred to above, that the bride is only given rights in her husband's share of his okka's property. It indicates, however, the growing importance of the elementary family among Coorgs.

When, however, the widow wants to marry someone who is not a member of her dead husband's okka, her connexion with the latter is first of all ritually broken. She then reverts to her natal okka, and at her new marriage her connexion with her natal okka is ritually severed, and rights are granted to her in her (new) husband's okka.

That is to say, a woman is compensated for the lack of the same quality of rights which a man has in his natal okka by the fact that she always enjoys a double membership: she never completely ceases to be a member of her natal okka, and at the same time she is a member of her husband's okka. She can go back to it under certain circumstances like widowhood or divorce.

Membership of the okka is extremely important, and lack of membership in some okka or other is tantamount to social extinction. Elders consequently try hard to see that the children of extra-marital alliances get berthed somewhere. It is right and proper that the father of the children should secure them membership of his okka, but if for some reason or other he cannot be persuaded to do so, the children are made members of their mother's okka.

The wife of the headman of the okka is the mistress of the household. She is called 'manépaṇikārti' (house-work-woman). Ideally, all the women in the okka have to work under her guidance. The relationship between the various women in the joint family is frequently one of conflict. There is first of all the relationship between the mother-in-law and daughter-in-law, which is celebrated in Coorg and other South Indian folklore as one of conflict. In a society where the sexes are segregated even inside the household and where elders are very highly respected, the mother-in-law, conjugal okka and reverts to her natal okka. Such reversion is automatic and not conditional upon the unanimous consent of the members of her natal okka. But if a woman has been divorced for a grave offence, her natal okka might decide to have nothing to do with her.

4. Children of unsanctioned unions are referred to as mai kaṇat makka and they do not enjoy membership of their father's okka as legitimate children do. In fact, they are not members of any okka. Usually, however, elders bring pressure on the lover's kindred to the grant of membership for the children in the lover's okka. But if this is impossible, the children are made members of their mother's natal okka.

If the children of an unsanctioned union and their mother are given membership in the lover's okka while both the woman and her lover are still alive it is called bendu (relative) parijé. If, however, the father dies before the children and their mother have been given sammanda in his okka, then the elders try to see that sammanda is given at least before the corpse is disposed of. Such a belated granting of membership is called kuṭṭa (funeral pyre) parijé. This enables the widow to take part in the funeral rites.

5. A boy from outside is adopted when there are no agnatic descendants in an okka. Sammanda is performed, giving the boy in question membership of the heirless okka.

6. Adoption is not, however, necessary if there is an unmarried girl (or even the widow of a dead member) in the okka without an heir. The girl is then married according to the custom of okka parijé by which the children of the marriage become members of their mother's natal okka. The man himself ceases to be a member of his natal okka and becomes instead a member of his wife's natal okka.

The institution of makka (children) parijé is resorted to when it is impossible to find a man willing to leave his natal okka and become a member of the heirless okka. Makka parijé is a sanctioned union between the daughter of the heirless okka and a man who, while remaining a member of his natal okka and performing his duties by it, also agrees to raise up seed for the heirless okka. He usually stays in his natal home and visits his makka parijé 'wife' only occasionally. The children of this alliance are members of their mother's okka. It is usual for the makka parijé 'husband' to have a wife married to him in the normal way and living with him in his natal home. The children of the latter union, unlike the children of severed from her conjugal okka the children are also severed from their paternal okka. While the widow or divorcée automatically reverts to her natal okka, her children have to be given rights at a special sammanda ceremony.[1]

If, however, the widow or divorcée marries again, the children do not follow her automatically into her new husband's okka. They are members of their mother's okka, and the unanimous consent of the members of their mother's okka and that of the members of the mother's new husband's okka is necessary to transfer them from one to the other.

Elders usually make efforts to ensure that the children of an unsanctioned union are given membership of their father's okka. It is clearly recognized that he who had the pleasure of being genitor has the duty of becoming pater as well, and this means that the children of an unsanctioned union have to be made members of the genitor's okka. Where, however, for various reasons the children cannot be given membership of their father's okka, they are given membership of their mother's okka. It is feared that if the children do not have membership in any okka people will refer to them contemptuously as 'the children born of adultery' (mai kaṇat makka).[2]

When a girl becomes pregnant as the result of union with a man not married to her, the girl's relatives press for recognition of the union. The man involved and his people might agree at once, in which case the girl's relatives have to go to the boys' home and give a feast to the relatives of the man and members of his village. The girl's relatives should carry with them all the provisions of this dinner, excepting mustard and salt.[3]

[1] The sammanda formulas used on this occasion are fundamentally similar to the formulas used in other cases. That is why I have not described them.

[2] In the folktale of Kanniaḍa Kāmayya, the boy Kāmayya's playmates refer to him contemptuously as 'one who is without a father'. Kāmayya is greatly hurt by this and tells his mother that he will fast unto death if the identity and whereabouts of his father are not disclosed. His mother tells him that he is miraculously born, and that his father is the very sacred axe (chandrāyudha) which is a symbol for a deity.

[3] Among Coorgs as among other patrilineal and patrilocal castes of south India, a girl has her first confinement in her natal home. The first confinement is believed to be a dangerous and critical affair, and it is considered best for the girl to have her mother and other relatives of her natal home with her at this time.

During the fifth or seventh month of a girl's first pregnancy, her mother and other relatives go to their affines carrying with them all the provisions of a 848 596 627 After the dinner is over, the girl is given sammanda in the man's okka. When the members of the man's okka agree to give sammanda after the girl has given birth to a baby, both the mother and newly born child are admitted to membership.

Sometimes the agnatic relatives of the man might refuse to give sammanda to the woman and her children as long as both the man and woman are alive. But death of one of them might bring about a change in their attitude as the surviving spouse and children have important parts to play in the funeral ritual. If it is the woman who is dead, the giving of sammanda enables the corpse to be buried in the man's okka's burial-ground.

The members of the genitor's village who are present when sammanda is given should be collectively paid witness-money of a rupee.

The procedure which has been described above holds good whether the woman concerned is a spinster or a widow.

526 428 585 A Coorg proverb says, 'When the cattle-shed was destined to come to an end only bull calves were born, and when the okka was destined to come to an end only girls were born'. As mentioned earlier, an okka is threatened with extinction if there are no male heirs. If, however, there is an unmarried girl in such an okka she is married in either the okka parijé or makka parijé way. In both these forms the children born of the union perpetuate the mother's natal okka.

In the sammanda ritual performed at an okka parijé marriage, the bride's family friend definitely asks the groom's family friend whether in view of the absence of heirs in the bride's okka the groom is prepared to stand as 'the trunk' of the bride's okka.

No sammanda ritual is, however, necessary at a makka parijé marriage as the groom does not become a member of the bride's okka. A rite is performed which makes clear the implications of the kind of union entered into: the bride's family friend says, 'Since there is no heir in Muthamma's natal okka, Ponnappa of such-and-such an okka has agreed to unite with Muthamma, and it is the
